

Longfellow's New Poem.

The great literary event of the season has been Dr. Henry W. Longfellow's poem of "The Hanging of the Crane," which was read in Boston on Thursday evening by Mr. Sidney Woolf, of London. There was a large and intelligent audience assembled. Mr. Woolf was introduced and went on with Mr. Longfellow's poem, as follows:

Hanging of the Crane.
[Prelude in c-minor, to hang the crane, is the French expression for a house-warming, or the first party given in a new house.]

The light is out, and so are all the guests
That thronged the house with merriment and jests
To celebrate the hanging of the crane
In the new house—into the night are gone
But still the fire upon the hearth burns red,
And I alone remain.

O fortunate, O happy day!
When a new household finds its place
Among the myriad homes of earth.
Like a new star just springing to birth
And reeling on its luminous way
Till the boundaries of space!
I do not know the guests to speak and sing,
As in the chimney, burning bright,
We hang the first crane on the wall,
And merry was the feast and long.

And now I sit and muse on what may be,
And in my vision see the guests
Through flaming lamps, but more divine
Shapes determined, that gleam and fade,
As shadows passing into deeper shade
Pink and blue the light.

For two alone, there in the hall,
I spread the table, read and small
Upon the polished silver
The evening lamps, but more divine
The light of love shines over all:
Of love that says not mine and thine
But ours, for ours is thine and mine.
They wait no guests, they come between
Their tender glances like a screen,
And tell them tales of love and war,
And whatever may befall.

The great, forgotten world outside;
They wait no guests, they come between
Their tender glances like a screen,
And tell them tales of love and war,
And whatever may befall.

The picture faded, as at a village fair
A showman's view directed into the air,
To reappear, but more divine
The light of love shines over all:
Of love that says not mine and thine
But ours, for ours is thine and mine.

And now I sit and muse on what may be,
And in my vision see the guests
Through flaming lamps, but more divine
Shapes determined, that gleam and fade,
As shadows passing into deeper shade
Pink and blue the light.
